

Constantinos Tsamadias is Professor Emeritus (Economic Evaluation of Education, Life Long Learning and Research) at the Harokopio University, Athens-Greece. He graduated from the Dep. of Mathematics and the Dep. of Economics of the National and Kapodistrian University of Athens. He received a graduate certificate in Business Administration from Athens University of Economics and Business. He was awarded his PhD at the Economics of Education, Harokopio University. He has taught (graduate and post graduate levels) at Harokopio University, University of Thessaly, Higher Technological Institutions Piraeus and Central Greece. He teaches at the post graduate level at the University of Thessaly. His main research interests are in Economic Analysis, Economics of Education, Economics of R&D and Innovation, Quantitative methods in Economics. Research papers (more than 60) published in Economics of Innovation and New Technology, Education Economics, Journal of Technology Transfer, International Economic Journal, Review of Regional Research, Journal of the Knowledge Economy, etc. He is president of Hellenic Institution of Economics of Education & Life Long Learning and of Research & Innovation.